It was a little less than three weeks since Chilcote and Loder had drunk their toast, and again Loder was seated at his desk. His head was bent and his hand moved carefuly as he traced line after line of meaningless words on a sheet of foolscap. Having covered the page with writing, he rose, moved to the center table and compared his task with an open letter that lay there. The comparison seemed to please him; he straightened his shoulders and threw back his head in an attitude of critical satisfaction. So absorbed was he that, when a step sounded on the stairs outside he did not notice it, and only raised his head when the door was thrown open un-

Chilcote shut the door and came hastily gcross the room. He looked ill and harassed. As he reached Loder he put out his Chilcote stirred uncomfortably, "My dear chap," he said. "I meant no offense, It's merely-"Your nerves. I know. But come Chilcote rose excitedly. "Yes, business.

Let's come to business. It's rough on you, taking you short like this. But you have an erratic person to deal with. I've had a horrible day—a horrible day." His face had paled again, and in the green lamplight it possessed a grayish hue. Involun-tarily Loder turned away.

An hour later the two men passed from Loder's bed room, where the final arrange-ments had been completed, back into the sitting room. Loder came first, in faultless evening dress. His hair was carefully brushed, the clothes he wore litted him per-fectly. To any glance, critical or casual evening. Chilcote's manner of walking and poise of the head seemed to have descended upon him with Chilcote's clothes. He same into the room hastily and passed to the

"That implies a woman?"
"Yes." Again Loder looked at the scar on his finger. "I seldom recall the thing, it's so absolutely past. But I rather like to remember it tonight. I rather want you to know that I've been through the fire. It's a sort of guarantee."

Chilcote made a hasty gesture, but the other interrupted it.

"Oh, I know you trust me. But you're giv-ing me a risky post. I want you to see that women are out of my line—quite out of it "But, my dear chap—" Loder went on without heeding. "This thing happened eight years ago at Santasalare," he said, "a little place between Luna and Pistoria—a mere handful of houses wedged between two hills. A regular relic of old Italy crumbling away under flowers and sunshine, with nothing to suggest the present century except the occasional passing of a train round the base of one of the hills. I had literally stumbled upon the place on a long tramp south from Switze land, and had been tempted into a stay the little inn. The night after my arrival something unusual occurred. There was an cident to the train at the point where it skirted the village.

"There was a small excitement; all the inhabitants were anxious to help, and I took my share. As a matter of fact, the smash was not disastrous; the passengers were hurt and frightened, but nobody was killed." He paused and looked at his companion

but, seeing him interested, went on

"Among these passengers was an English lady. Of all concerned in the business, she was the least upset. When I came upon her she was sitting on the shattered door of one of the carriages, calmly rearranging her hat. On seeing me she looked up with the most charming smile imaginable. "'I have just been waiting for somebody like you,' she said. 'My stupid maid has got ed finger. The maid, who was practically unhurt, was sent on to engage rooms at the Ittle inn, and she and I followed slowly. "That walk impressed me. There was an warm night, a sensation more than attrac-tive in being made much of by a woman of one's own class and country after tive years' wandering." He laughed with a touch of irony. "But I won't take up your heart, and you have the whole thing.

"She insisted on staying in Santasala: weeks in the hope of smashing up my life.
"On coming to the hotel she had given no other she led me to conclude her an un-married girl. It was at the end of the three weeks that I learned that she was not
